Sie Vita-Such is Life. At the East end of this aisle-church of St. Mary Overy, London-stands a monument, a portion of whose inscription lows: consists of the first verse of the following beautiful poem, which is thought, and with some probability, to be the production of Quarles.—Annals of St. Mary Overy, by W.

Like to the damask rose you see, Or like the blossom on the tree, Or like the dainty flower of May, Or like the morning of the day, Or like the sun, or like the shade, Or like the gourd which Jonas had : Even so is man, whose thread is spun, Drawn out and cut, and so is done The rose withers, the blossom blasteth. The flower fades, the morning hasteth, The sun sets, the shadow flies, The gourd consumes, the man he dies. Like to the grass that's newly sprung, Or like the tale that's just begun, Or like the bird that's here to-day, Or like the pearled dew of May, Or like an hour, or like a span, Or like the singing of a swan, E'en such is man, who lives by breath : Is here, is there; in life, in death! The grass decays, the tale doth end The bird is flown, the dews ascend, The hour is short, the span not long, The swans' near death! man's life is done! Like to a bubble on a brook, Or-in a mirror-like a look Or like a shuttle in the hand, Or like a writing on the sand. Or like a thought, or like a dream. Or like the gliding of a stream; 'en such is man, whose life is breath, Is here, is there; in life, in death! The bubble's burst ; the look's forgot. The shuttle's flung ; the writing's blot The thought is pass'd; the dream is gone;

Polecats, invisible, still haunt your barns, searching for airy chickens, finding ghostly eggs in unheard of nests-then stealing, and giving odor in your cellars; apparitions of departed cats haunt pulseless mice, and in your parlors, phantom kittens chase their goblin tails. Henceforth, let every man take heed, lest, in pulling off his boots, he kicks his dear departed Carlo; and let

[From the Paris Constitutionnel, Jan. 23.1 French Opinion of the English Troops The first thing which would strike a spectator arriving at Sebastopol, is the great contrast which exists between the English and French armies. In the former are to be observed the reign of formality, and the strict observance of rank and of social position. After the hour of battle there are no longer any relations between the officers and the privates. Whilst the French officers always mingle with their men, constantly occupy themselves with the means of supplying their wants, the English officers remain inactive, if not indifferent; this is the affair of the government. On the other hand, they have the highest possible sense of honor and of their duty, and will perform the most heroic actions. The English soldiers are somewhat of the same stamp as their officers; they fight admirably, but keep bad watch, and are not very good for work. They require to have paid hands for this latter purpose. It is an army splendid in battle, but it is not made for undergoing sufferings. The organization is bad, because it is incomplete, and because proper administrative services do not exist. It is shown that the French army, on the contrary, is essentially calculated to support suffering and consequently war also, provided there be constant emotions to keep alive such excitable imaginations. -A kind of familiarity exists in the relations of the officers with the men, and on the part of the superior officers a kind sympathy which supports and encourages. There is a sort of union in all the de-A regular and thorough course of study has been adopted in order to graduation, and no efforts will be spared to promote the moral and intellectual welfare of the students.
